

Time and Space in the Governance of Migration

Open Lecture 5 September

Ayelet Shachar

University of Toronto

We think of the border as a static line, but bordering techniques today have broken away from the map, stretching borders in space and in time. What does it mean for persons on the move? Can the law protect wherever and whenever we are under the state's authority? A leading authority on migration and citizenship, Ayelet Shachar unpacks the answer in this open lecture, delivered as part of the International Symposium on Time, Temporalities, and Migration Law, organised by the Department of Philosophy and the Department of Law, to offer a unique opportunity to engage with one today's most distinguished legal scholars.

Discussants

5 September, 16.15-18.00

Registration

Martijn Stronks
VU Amsterdam

Humanistiska teatern,
Thunbergsvägen 3C
Engelska parken

Sofia Näsström
Uppsala University

<https://registration.invajo.com/104ee135-2732-4668-80e1-859dd7dd7232>